Biomedicine In An Unstable Place

Biomedicine in an Unstable Place is the story of people's struggle to make biomedicine work in a public hospital in Papua New Guinea. It is a story encompassing the history of hospital infrastructures as sites of colonial and postcolonial governance, the simultaneous production of Papua New Guinea as a site of global medical research and public health, and people's encounters with urban institutions and biomedical technologies.

Running through Biomedicine in an Unstable Place is an idiom of visibility. A primary concern of many who work in or pass through the hospital is that they are invisible to the people by whom they need to be noticed. Patients worry that doctors don't see their suffering; nurses worry that the state does not see the difficulty of their work.
