But if we cannot find a way of telling our story, our story tells us- we dream these stories, we develop symptoms, or we find ourselves acting in ways we don't understand." — Stephen Grosz, The Examined Life: How We Lose and Find Ourselves

The Examined Life Quotes by Stephen Grosz
According to Socrates, the examined life is one that is characterized by a commitment to a philosophical inquiry (Plato The Apology 38a). In other words, it is an endless pursuit of virtue, which is not possible without regularly engaging in introspection (Plato The Republic 24c; "Socrates: The Good Life").
