The "Philosophy of History" is Hegel's story about the unfolding of God in history. The world is God's creation, but that realization is not at first readily apparent. Man (humans are) is immersed in nature, a slave to his self-interest and its very material accoutrements.

The Philosophy of History by Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel

Hegel argues that all of history is caused and guided by a rational process, and God's seemingly unknowable plan is rendered intelligible through philosophy. The notion that reason rules the world, he concludes, is both necessary to the practice of philosophic history and a conclusion drawn from that practice.
